Sort parts program guide.Rep. Ron Paul's son Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) apologized on Thursday after a bizarre incident in which a reporter was assaulted by one of his supporters on the Senate floor. A Paul staffer had approached the camera operator of MSNBC's "Morning Joe" and had asked him for a small note to send to Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) to help his father during the filibuster. There was a witness to this bystander's request. "Do you have any evidence you can present?" MSNBC's Mika Brzezinski asked. ADVERTISEMENT "Cause this is pure speculation on your part." Paul said. "How's he going to help his dad in a filibuster if he has no evidence?" When Paul was joined by Reid's press secretary Adam Jentleson and a Department of Justice official, Paul asked if there was any evidence that Mitt Romney's campaign had coordinated with Reid's campaign. "We have not seen it," Jentleson said. "Sen. Reid is doing his job of making sure that there is no interference with the election." "I'm just asking for a note to Sen. Reid." Paul said. Paul said he had a conversation with Reid on Wednesday and asked Reid for a security update on the filibuster. "This is nothing more than speculation. I know that Senator Reid thought your show was amusing," Paul said. "I'm not concerned, I'm not offended." On Thursday, Paul apologized for the incident on the Senate floor, saying the act "did not reflect" his intent and that he took full responsibility. "I deeply regret my staff member's involvement in a situation that was uncharacteristic of his training, guidance and of the Pauls," he said. "I am taking full responsibility and apologize to all involved." Q: Can I send a message to client with axios before response received?
