What's new:

Details We would love to have ZPG (aka fj2000, fj2000), a motocross helmet maker that's been around for quite some time now. We've wanted one for a while now, but just never found a fit for us. Sometime later this year they're coming out with another version of their Moto helmet that has adjustable side panels. What do we do here on The FITS? We get one and commission them to make us one, of course! The process took a bit longer than usual, so we had a lot of time to think about what we wanted. I wanted a retro look that was super vintage styled. I also wanted a nice dark grey on the sides, and white removable vents on the helmet (a retro wolf pelt look, I guess). The first thing ZPG did is send me a mock-up of how they intend to manufacture the helmets (the interior molding was another step) for their powdercoating process. They are going to literally powdercoat the protective foam/helmet that they are going to manufacture after assembly for a more durable finish. They also packed in a set of liners to test out since they are after-all going to be molding a whole new helmet so the liners aren't going to last long. Everything else was laid out on a table for approval. I sent a few questions to the email they gave me to get some clarification of some things they're doing and I got a short response. If you want to see that here it is: They emailed me fairly fast once the order was placed and got to work. Normally my process involves paying 200 to 250 dollars for shipping, which works out for getting a helmet by mid to late August since it usually takes about 4-6 weeks for a helmet to arrive to me. It took a bit longer for ZPG, but they aren't sure why. The last shipping date was the 5th of July, and they sent me an email on the 10th saying the box is ready to pick up on August 1st. I went to pick it up today and was surprised to see they shipped the helmet overnight. Even more surprising, there's another helmet that I had ordered with them before that was made just a few days after I first ordered. We'll see if they send me the
